bacco, and raw silk. Wine is also produced in the area south of Tbilisi, with the center at Bolnisi (formerly Lyuksemburgi).

The livestock herds of Georgia graze chiefly in mountain pastures. This is especially true of the sheep and goats. There is some dairy farming in the Kura valley.

The health resorts of the Georgian SSR play an important role in the economy of the country. They fall principally within the mineral springs and climatological varieties and are frequented by tourists and convalescents from the entire USSR. The best-known resorts are Abastumani, in the southwest, the high altitude resorts of Borzhomi (famous for its bottled mineral water) and near-by Bakuriani, and also Surami and Tskhaltubo.

For transportation facilities Georgia relies mainly on the Baku-Tbilisi-Batumi trunk railroad and its many branches. During the Second World War the Black Sea coastal line was completed; it is now used by direct Moscow-Tbilisi trains. Formerly the route led around the eastern end of the Greater Caucasus and via Baku. Short spurs connect the main trunk line with the port of Poti, the mines of Tkibuli and Chiatura, the resort of Borzhomi, and the lignite mines near Akhaltsikhe, as well as with Stalinir, the capital of the South Ossetian Autonomous Oblast. From Navtlug, an eastern suburb of Tbilisi, a branch goes northeast to Kakhetia, and the southern main line leads to the Armenian SSR and the Aras valley. Three important highways cross the central portion of the Greater Caucasus into Georgia. These are the Sukhumi military road, crossing at Klukhori Pass and terminating at Sukhumi on the Black Sea, the Ossetian military road, which leads through Mamison Pass to Kutaisi, and the Georgian military road, which starts at Dzaudzhikau (North Ossetian Autonomous SSR), winds through the picturesque Dar'yal gorge, overcomes the crest at Krestovyy Pass, and has its southern terminus at Mtskheta and Tbilisi.

The principal export products of the Georgian SSR include manganese, lumber, tobacco, fruits (mainly citrus fruits), wine, and tea.

Tbilisi (formerly Tiflis) is the capital of the Georgian SSR and the second largest city and industrial center of Transcaucasia. It is a very old city, which was founded on the historic route leading from Europe to Asia along the Kura valley. It lies at the junction of the Transcaucasian trunk railroad with the Georgian military road. The industry includes machine construction (primarily implements used in oil drilling and the processing of raw silk, wine, and tea), textile milling (silk and
